

Navigating Economic Diplomacy in Indo-Maldivian Relations

Ambika Subramaniam

Abstract

The electoral victory of President Mohamed Muizzu in Maldives marks a critical juncture in the nation's foreign policy, with drastic effects on its bilateral relations with India. This paper looks at the economic realignment of the Maldives under Muizzu's administration, shifting from a pro-India position to a more balanced approach that seems to favour closer ties with China and then back to a pro-India stance when required. The analysis starts with an overview of historical India-Maldives relations, stressing their deep-rooted connections in security, economic cooperation, and cultural ties. His election in September 2023, led to the swift withdrawal of Indian military personnel stationed in the Maldives-an action which resonated with nationalist sentiment against perceived foreign influence. It reflects a more general tendency within Maldivian politics: growing concerns of sovereignty and national security dictate an increasing extent of foreign policy decisions. Besides this, economic diplomacy is shown to play a crucial role in bilateral relationships. India has provided and continues to commit large financial assistance and infrastructural investment for the Maldives economy, which becomes a barricade for the debt-ridden island nation's economy. Still, engaging with China deeper, as is the case with Maldives through its joint developmental activities, has to balance the economic relationship not to over-rely on a single partner.

The following study further explores implications that Muizzu's foreign policy entails on India-Maldives relationships specifically in terms of economic partnerships. A natural consequence of the internationalisation strategy of the Maldives - it is diversifying relationships around itself, including closer co-operations with China through joint programmes, especially the Belt and Road Initiative, BRI - should affect India's role as its traditional ally. It concludes by examining the prospective trajectory of India-Maldives relations within these changes. Positive concerns prompt the necessity of adaptive strategies for both countries to face this changing geopolitical landscape.

Keywords: Indo-Maldivian Relations; Bilateral Relations; Economic Diplomacy; Trade Co-operations

Introduction

Indo Maldivian relationship is a classic of two countries in South Asia, with inseparable histories and shared destinies. The bilateral relation has been in place for a long time and has been supported by cultural proximity, shared economic interests, and cooperative strategic interests that have transformed the Maldives into an indispensable partner for India in the Indian Ocean. Aside from the bilateral aspect, the significance of this relationship can be seen influencing regional stability, maritime security, and larger geopolitical dynamics. India's policy in the Maldives has always placed the principles of neighborhood first and SAGAR (Security and Growth for All in the Region) at their highest priority. This not only consolidated Indian influence on the Maldives' development path, but made India a reliable friend on the Maldives' development path. The Maldivian politics, however, have been anything but static. Alternation of governments every now and then has created swings in policy that have always been guided by internal political scripts and the geopolitics of the Indian Ocean.

The election of President Mohamed Muizzu in 2023 marks the latest phase in this evolving dynamic. With a campaign focused on asserting sovereignty and recalibrating foreign alliances, Muizzu's victory gestures a potential pivot in the Maldives' foreign policy trajectory. Recent political developments underscore the urgency of recalibrating economic diplomacy. President Mohamed Muizzu, elected in 2023 on a platform emphasizing national sovereignty and "India Out" rhetoric, has signaled a reorientation of Maldivian foreign policy. In his inaugural address and subsequent remarks, Muizzu explicitly stated that foreign troops, including Indian personnel, must be withdrawn to "protect the sovereignty of the Maldives" (Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Maldives, 2023). While this may be seen as symbolic positioning, it reflects broader concerns over external dependencies and shifts in the Maldives' strategic calculus.

Simultaneously, the Maldives' engagement with non-traditional partners like Turkey and the UAE has gained traction. Turkey has deepened its role in infrastructure development and defense cooperation, while the UAE has expanded its footprint in trade and renewable energy sectors. These multilateral relationships complicate the once-straightforward narrative of a tug-of-war between India and China and necessitate a more nuanced understanding of Male's foreign policy architecture.

In a time characterized by increasing competition for power in key regions, the Maldives is a miniature model of the wider competition between historic friends and ascending powers. Understanding the dynamic is not an intellectual nicety; it is essential to policymakers, strategists, and scholars struggling to interpret 21st-century geopolitics.

Historical Context of Indo-Maldivian Relations

Since the Maldives' independence from British colonial authority in 1965, a complex interaction of historical, cultural, and geopolitical variables has defined their relationship with India. Significant occurrences like India's participation during the 1988 coup attempt and continued economic cooperation have shaped this friendship over the years. However, this bilateral relationship now has new dynamics as a result of recent geopolitical changes, especially the expansion of Chinese power in the Indian Ocean.

Following the Maldives' independence on July 26, 1965, India was one of the first nations to acknowledge the country. On November 1st of that year, diplomatic relations were formally established, setting the foundation for a friendship that has withstood many hardships over the years. In terms of regional peace and security, the Maldives is an essential partner for India due to its advantageous location in the Indian Ocean, directly south of India. Signed in 1976, the Maritime Boundary Agreement was one of the most important accords between India and the Maldives. It reaffirmed respect for each other's sovereignty while defining territorial seas. This deal demonstrated India's dedication to preserving the Maldives' independence in addition to resolving any disagreements.

A pivotal moment in India-Maldives relations occurred during Operation Cactus in November 1988. This military operation was launched in response to an attempted coup by mercenaries supported by Tamil militants from Sri Lanka. The swift intervention of Indian forces successfully thwarted the coup and restored President Maumoon Abdul Gayoom to power. This event underscored India's role as a guarantor of stability in the region and solidified its position as a key ally for the Maldives. The operation received international endorsement and highlighted India's capability to project power in its immediate neighborhood. It also fostered a sense of security among Maldivians regarding their sovereignty and territorial integrity.

Over the years, India has extended substantial financial assistance to the Maldives, contributing to various developmental projects. Notable among these is the Greater Male Connectivity Project (GMCP), aimed at enhancing infrastructure through improved connectivity between Malé and surrounding islands. Such initiatives have not only bolstered economic ties but also reinforced India's image as a reliable partner committed to Maldives' development trajectory. India's aid has extended beyond infrastructure; it includes humanitarian assistance during crises such as the 2004 tsunami and more recent water shortages in Malé. In December 2018, during a state visit by Maldivian President Ibrahim Mohamed Solih, India announced a comprehensive financial assistance package worth approximately USD 1.4 billion. This package included USD 50 million as budgetary support, as well as funding for various infrastructure projects such as housing, health care, and education. The commitment to provide this level of assistance highlighted India's strategic interest in maintaining stability in the Maldives and ensuring that it remained aligned with Indian interests. These interventions have fostered goodwill and strengthened people-to-people connections between both nations.

In recent years, however, China's growing influence in the Indian Ocean has posed challenges to traditional India-Maldives relations. Under former President Abdulla Yameen, who held a pro-China stance, the Maldives engaged more deeply with China's Belt and Road Initiative (BRI). This engagement led to significant investments but also resulted in increased debt for the Maldivian government. The strategic partnership with China raised concerns in New Delhi about losing influence over its southern neighbor. Yameen's administration pursued various infrastructural projects funded by China, which some analysts viewed as an attempt to shift allegiance away from India. This shift created a perception of vulnerability within India regarding its strategic interests in the Indian Ocean region.

The election of Ibrahim Solih in 2018 marked a significant pivot back towards an 'India First' policy. Solih's administration sought to restore strategic partnerships with India while expelling nationalist rhetoric that had characterized Yameen's tenure. Solih emphasized cooperation with India on security issues and reaffirmed commitments to previous agreements, signaling a renewed focus on bilateral ties.

Solih's government actively worked to mend relations with India through diplomatic engagements and joint projects aimed at enhancing security cooperation. This included defense collaborations such as joint military exercises and intelligence sharing.

Despite Solih's efforts to reinforce ties with India, political dynamics remain fluid. The recent election of President Mohamed Muizzu has introduced uncertainties into this relationship. Initially characterized by an 'India Out' campaign rhetoric aimed at reducing Indian military presence in the Maldives, Muizzu's administration has faced pressures to balance relations with both India and China. Muizzu's visit to China before engaging with Indian officials raised eyebrows in New Delhi but also highlighted his administration's attempt to navigate complex geopolitical realities.

In his meetings with Chinese officials, Muizzu emphasized the importance of mutual respect and sovereignty, stating, “We may be small, but that doesn’t give you the license to bully us.” These remarks were interpreted as a direct reference to India’s historical influence in the Maldives. The visit underscored Muizzu's intent to strengthen ties with China while navigating the delicate balance of regional geopolitics.

Following this visit, Muizzu met with Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi on January 10, 2025, reinforcing the commitment to deepen bilateral cooperation. Both leaders expressed their intention to further solidify their partnership and explore avenues for collaboration in international and regional affairs. Nevertheless, high-level discussions between Muizzu and Indian leaders are crucial for mending ties and ensuring continued cooperation on economic fronts.

Policy Shifts under President Mohamed Muizzu

The Maldives under President Mohamed Muizzu has undergone significant shifts in its foreign policy, particularly regarding its relationship with India. This transformation is rooted in a complex interplay of domestic politics, economic realities, and regional dynamics. Initially propelled by a strong anti-India sentiment during his campaign, Muizzu's administration has moved towards a more pragmatic approach, reflecting the necessity to balance national interests with regional diplomacy.

Upon taking office in November 2023, Muizzu quickly acted on his campaign promises, which included the withdrawal of Indian military personnel stationed in the Maldives. These forces had been primarily involved in operating helicopters and a Dornier aircraft for search and rescue operations. This decision was interpreted as a clear indication of the new government’s intent to assert Maldivian sovereignty and reduce reliance on India.

Furthermore, Muizzu's administration sought to strengthen ties with other regional powers such as Turkey and China, raising concerns in New Delhi about the shifting allegiances of the Maldives.

The opposition Maldivian Democratic Party (MDP), which had previously criticized Muizzu's stance toward India, welcomed what they termed a "sudden recalibration" of the Maldives-India policy. However, they condemned earlier actions taken by Muizzu's administration that they believed had damaged the Maldives' foreign and economic outlook. The MDP called for a public apology regarding the "India Out" campaign; however, Muizzu rebuffed these calls, insisting that there had been no fundamental shift in his government's policy. Instead, he framed recent developments as a continuation of his commitment to maintaining strong relationships with any country that respects Maldivian sovereignty.

The economic realities facing the Maldives have played a crucial role in shaping Muizzu's foreign policy. The nation is grappling with significant economic challenges, including high debt levels and a need for infrastructure development. In this context, strengthening ties with China has become a priority for Muizzu's administration. Following his party's sweeping victory in parliamentary elections, which secured more than 70 seats in the 93-member assembly, there is an expectation that Muizzu will accelerate efforts to deepen strategic ties with Beijing and revive Chinese-funded infrastructure projects that had been stalled under the previous administration.

China established its presence in the Maldives over a decade ago under a pro-Beijing government that joined China's Belt and Road Initiative (BRI). However, this influence waned during the presidency of Ibrahim Mohamed Solih, who prioritized relations with India and raised concerns about the Maldives' growing debt to China. Analysts suggest that while Muizzu campaigned on an "India Out" platform, he may moderate his anti-India stance given the Maldives' reliance on India for essential goods such as food and healthcare. The patterns of China's international behavior also reflect a willingness to assert its influence in regions traditionally dominated by other powers, such as India in South Asia. By fostering closer ties with the Maldives, China aims to expand its presence in the Indian Ocean, which is strategically important for maritime trade routes. This expansion could lead to increased competition between India and China for influence over Maldivian resources and political alignment.

Despite initial moves to distance from India, recent developments indicate a cautious thawing of relations. For instance, New Delhi allowed limited exports of commodities like sugar, wheat, rice, and onions to the Maldives despite imposing curbs on these exports domestically. This gesture underscores India's continued commitment to supporting the Maldivian economy during challenging times.

Muizzu's administration must navigate domestic pressures while managing foreign relations effectively. His ability to balance ties with both India and China will be critical in ensuring that the Maldives can leverage its strategic position in the Indian Ocean without compromising its sovereignty or economic stability. The Maldivian government has also expressed interest in continuing cooperation with India on defense matters while asserting its independence regarding military affairs.

In November 2024, President Muizzu made a significant visit to India that highlighted this evolving relationship. During this visit, discussions centered around defense agreements and economic partnerships aimed at bolstering bilateral ties. The Maldivian government emphasized its commitment to safeguarding national interests while engaging with international partners.

The recent parliamentary elections have provided Muizzu's government with a mandate to pursue its foreign policy objectives more aggressively. With a supermajority in parliament, there is potential for significant changes in how the Maldives engages with global powers. This shift may include reviving stalled infrastructure projects funded by China while maintaining essential economic ties with India.

As part of this recalibration of foreign policy, Muizzu has also made it clear that he intends to prioritize domestic concerns alongside international partnerships. His administration has committed to addressing pressing issues such as housing insecurity and infrastructure deficits through strategic collaborations with both Indian and Chinese entities.

The shift towards China is not without risks; analysts warn that increased reliance on Chinese investments could exacerbate existing debt issues for the Maldives. The International Monetary Fund (IMF) has already cautioned about high risks of debt distress for the island nation due to its previous borrowing patterns. Therefore, while pursuing closer ties with China may offer immediate economic benefits through infrastructure development, it could also lead to long-term financial challenges if not managed prudently.

In summary, President Mohamed Muizzu's foreign policy reflects a nuanced approach aimed at balancing domestic priorities with international relations. While initially characterized by an anti-India sentiment during his campaign, his administration is now navigating complex geopolitical realities that necessitate collaboration with multiple partners. The evolving relationship between the Maldives and India will remain critical as both nations seek to address their respective economic challenges while ensuring regional stability in an increasingly competitive geopolitical landscape.

As President Muizzu continues to assert his "Maldives First" policy framework, he faces the challenge of aligning domestic expectations with international realities. His ability to maintain constructive relationships with both India and China will be pivotal for the Maldives' future trajectory as it seeks sustainable development amid shifting global dynamics. The implications of these policy shifts will not only affect bilateral relations but also shape regional security considerations within the broader Indian Ocean context.

Economic Diplomacy and Bilateral Relationships

Economic diplomacy plays a crucial role in shaping bilateral relationships, particularly in the context of India and the Maldives. The evolving dynamics between these two nations reflect how economic cooperation can serve as a foundation for broader political and strategic ties. As both countries navigate their respective challenges, economic diplomacy has emerged as a key instrument for fostering mutual benefits, enhancing stability, and addressing pressing issues such as debt management and infrastructure development.

The relationship between India and the Maldives has historically been characterized by close economic ties, which have been further solidified through various agreements and initiatives. Since the early 2000s, India has provided extensive economic assistance to the Maldives, including financial aid, infrastructure development projects, and support for various sectors such as health, education, and tourism. This assistance has not only contributed to the Maldives' economic growth but has also reinforced India's position as a key partner in the region.

In recent years, the Maldives has faced significant economic challenges, exacerbated by rising debt levels and the impact of global economic shifts. The COVID-19 pandemic further strained the Maldivian economy, leading to a decline in tourism—a critical sector for the country. In this context, India's role as a reliable partner has become increasingly important. The Indian government has extended substantial financial support to help stabilize the Maldivian economy, including a $400 million currency swap agreement and a commitment of INR 30 billion in budgetary support. These measures are aimed at addressing immediate financial challenges while laying the groundwork for long-term economic resilience.

The recent bilateral visit by President Mohamed Muizzu to India marked a significant step in resetting ties that had become strained under previous administrations. During this visit, both leaders announced a vision for a "Comprehensive Economic and Maritime Security Partnership," which encompasses various aspects of cooperation aimed at enhancing bilateral trade and investment. This partnership reflects a recognition of the mutual benefits that can be derived from closer economic ties.

One of the key outcomes of this partnership is the initiation of discussions on a Bilateral Free Trade Agreement (FTA). The FTA aims to facilitate trade in goods and services between India and the Maldives, thereby harnessing the full economic potential of both countries. By reducing trade barriers and promoting investment opportunities, the FTA is expected to bolster economic interdependence and create new avenues for growth.

Additionally, both countries have agreed to operationalize trade transactions in local currencies. This move is designed to reduce dependency on foreign currencies and enhance trade linkages between India and the Maldives. By facilitating transactions in local currencies, both nations can mitigate exchange rate risks and streamline trade processes. This initiative aligns with broader efforts to enhance regional economic integration and promote sustainable development.

India's commitment to supporting infrastructure development in the Maldives remains a cornerstone of their bilateral relationship. Projects such as the Greater Male Connectivity Project (GMCP) exemplify India's role in enhancing connectivity within the Maldives. The GMCP is designed to improve transportation links between Malé and neighboring islands, thereby facilitating economic activities and improving access to essential services for local communities. Such projects not only contribute to immediate infrastructure needs but also have long-term implications for economic growth and regional stability.

Moreover, India's involvement in sectors such as fisheries, tourism, and agriculture underscores its commitment to diversifying economic cooperation with the Maldives. Both countries have expressed interest in collaborating on fisheries management and tuna processing—key components of the Maldivian economy. By leveraging India's expertise in these areas, the Maldives can enhance its capacity for sustainable resource management while creating new opportunities for trade.

The digital economy also presents significant opportunities for collaboration between India and the Maldives. The launch of initiatives such as the RuPay card in the Maldives aims to enhance payment systems for Indian tourists visiting the islands. This move not only simplifies transactions but also promotes greater tourism flows between both countries—an essential driver of economic growth for the Maldives.

In addition to these initiatives, India has played a pivotal role in supporting social development projects within the Maldives. The establishment of healthcare facilities such as the Indira Gandhi Memorial Hospital in Malé highlights India's commitment to improving health outcomes for Maldivians. Furthermore, educational scholarships offered by India have enabled numerous Maldivian students to pursue higher education opportunities in India, fostering people-to-people connections that strengthen bilateral ties.

Despite these positive developments, challenges remain that could impact economic diplomacy between India and the Maldives. The rise of Chinese influence in the region poses strategic concerns for India as it seeks to maintain its position as a primary partner for Maldivian development. Under previous administrations, particularly during President Abdulla Yameen's tenure, there was a notable shift towards China that resulted in increased debt levels for the Maldives due to extensive Chinese investments.

As President Muizzu navigates these complexities, his administration faces pressure to balance relations with both India and China while addressing domestic economic challenges. The need for sustainable debt management will be critical as Muizzu seeks to revitalize infrastructure projects that had stalled under previous leaderships due to concerns over excessive borrowing from China.

Strategic Diversification and Realignments

In the evolving landscape of geoeconomic competition, strategic diversification and realignments are imperative for the Maldives. Guided by Baldwin's theory of economic statecraft and Okano-Heijmans's economic diplomacy model, the nation's current efforts reflect a dual imperative: reducing vulnerability from economic overdependence on tourism and recalibrating its foreign alignments in light of shifting regional power dynamics. These initiatives, particularly under President Mohamed Muizzu, seek to position the Maldives as a resilient, multipolar, and forward-looking economy. Tourism has long been the economic mainstay of the Maldives, contributing directly over 20% to its GDP and indirectly up to 79% by 2022. However, the COVID-19 pandemic exposed the fragility of this mono-sector dependence. In response, the Maldivian government has launched a comprehensive diversification strategy that targets sectors like fisheries, agriculture, renewable energy, digital technology, construction, and financial services.

A key strategic focus is the revitalization of the fisheries sector, which once anchored the Maldivian economy. The recent decline in skipjack tuna yields has prompted efforts to implement better regulatory frameworks and sustainable practices. Through initiatives in aquaculture and export-driven value addition, the government aims to improve food security and expand foreign exchange earnings. Agriculture, although historically marginal, is now being repositioned through modernized farming and agribusiness development. This not only reduces import dependency—an acute issue for a geographically fragmented nation—but also fosters rural employment. Renewable energy is another critical pillar. With its abundant sun, wind, and ocean resources, the Maldives is exploring a green energy transition. Investments in solar and ocean thermal energy systems will not only reduce fossil fuel imports but also align the country with global climate commitments and sustainable development goals.

In line with the Okano-Heijmans model emphasizing commercial diplomacy and digital competitiveness, the Maldivian government is promoting the digital economy through initiatives in e-commerce, IT services, and digital upskilling. These efforts are designed to attract investment and enable local businesses to thrive in the international marketplace. The financial sector is also undergoing transformation. To attract Foreign Direct Investment (FDI) and promote financial inclusion, the government is streamlining banking regulations and fostering digital payment ecosystems. Economic diplomacy tools, such as currency swap agreements and fintech integration, echo India's RuPay rollout model and offer new vectors of influence. Importantly, the Maldives' diversification strategy is embedded within broader international cooperation frameworks. Partnerships with the Islamic Development Bank (IsDB) through the Member Country Partnership Strategy (MCPS) support inclusive development and climate resilience, aligning with the Maldives' Strategic Action Plan (SAP) 2019–2023 and the National Resilience and Recovery Plan (NRR) 2020–2022.

Strategic realignments in foreign policy complement economic restructuring. While India remains a vital partner—particularly via flagship projects like the Greater Malé Connectivity Project (GMCP), backed by a $100 million grant and a $400 million LoC—Muizzu’s administration is actively cultivating ties beyond the India–China binary.

Turkey and the UAE have emerged as influential partners. Turkey’s engagement spans tourism, infrastructure, and soft power initiatives, while the UAE’s role in logistics, energy, and investment is expanding rapidly. These multilateral ties not only diversify economic dependencies but also reflect the Maldives’ broader aspiration to reposition itself as a non-aligned yet strategically agile actor in the Indo-Pacific. While earlier administrations leaned heavily towards either India or China, Muizzu’s approach signals a calibrated pragmatism. Amid rising concerns over debt distress—with PPG debt ranging between 110–121% of GDP as per the IMF’s 2024 Article IV report—the administration appears focused on balancing development finance with long-term sovereignty protection. Sustainable development is the unifying theme across all these sectors. Eco-tourism initiatives, climate-resilient infrastructure, and urban planning reforms are being rolled out to ensure that growth is inclusive, environmentally sound, and locally beneficial.

Looking ahead, the success of this diversification and realignment strategy will depend on the government’s ability to harmonize stakeholder interests, ensure transparency, and integrate theoretical models of diplomacy and economic strategy into practical governance. If implemented effectively, the Maldives may not only mitigate current vulnerabilities but also emerge as a resilient, multipolar island economy in the Indian Ocean.

Implications for India

The implications of the evolving relationship between India and the Maldives are profound, especially in the context of strategic diversification and realignments. As the Maldives navigates its geopolitical landscape, the dynamics of its relationship with India will significantly impact both nations' security, economic stability, and regional influence. This analysis will delve into the key aspects of this relationship, focusing on economic cooperation, security concerns, and the broader implications for India as it seeks to maintain its influence in the Indian Ocean region.

Economic diplomacy has emerged as a cornerstone of India-Maldives relations. The Maldives faces significant economic challenges, including high debt levels and declining foreign exchange reserves. In this context, India's role as a major economic partner is crucial. In 2023, India became the largest trade partner for the Maldives, with bilateral trade reaching nearly $1 billion. This trade relationship is vital for both nations, as it not only supports Maldivian economic stability but also enhances India's influence in the region.

India's financial assistance to the Maldives has been substantial. Recent agreements include a currency swap agreement aimed at helping the Maldives manage its foreign exchange reserves and address immediate financial challenges. Additionally, India has committed to significant investments in infrastructure projects such as the Greater Male Connectivity Project (GMCP) and various community development initiatives. These investments are essential for improving connectivity within the Maldives and enhancing overall economic resilience. The introduction of initiatives such as operationalizing trade transactions in local currencies is another significant development. This move aims to reduce dependency on foreign currencies and streamline trade processes between both nations. By facilitating transactions in local currencies, India can help stabilize the Maldivian economy while strengthening bilateral ties.

The geopolitical landscape in which India and the Maldives operate is increasingly complex due to China's growing influence in the Indian Ocean region. China's Belt and Road Initiative (BRI) has led to increased investments in Maldivian infrastructure, raising concerns for India about losing strategic ground in its immediate neighborhood. The Muizzu administration's initial anti-India rhetoric was perceived as a tilt towards China, which could potentially undermine India's long-standing influence.

However, recent developments indicate that Muizzu recognizes the need for a balanced approach that accommodates both Indian and Chinese interests. The Maldives' reliance on Indian support—particularly in terms of finance and technical expertise—has become increasingly apparent as economic pressures mount. The need to restore ties with India is driven by pragmatic considerations rather than ideological ones. The security dimension of India-Maldives relations cannot be overlooked. The Maldives serves as a critical first line of defense against threats such as terrorism and piracy in the Indian Ocean. A strong partnership with the Maldives enhances India's ability to safeguard its maritime interests and counter potential threats from non-state actors operating in these waters.

Moreover, India's strategic presence in the Maldives acts as a counterbalance to China's growing footprint in the region. Strengthening defense cooperation through joint exercises, training programs, and intelligence sharing will be essential for ensuring regional stability. The recent commitment to refit and repair Maldivian Coast Guard vessels gifted by India exemplifies this focus on enhancing maritime security collaboration. It also has broader implications for regional stability in South Asia and beyond. As both nations work towards establishing a "Comprehensive Economic and Maritime Security Partnership," they are not only addressing bilateral concerns but also contributing to collective security efforts within the Indian Ocean region.

India's proactive engagement with the Maldives serves to reinforce its Neighbourhood First policy while aligning with its broader strategy of Security and Growth for All in the Region (SAGAR). By fostering strong relationships with neighboring countries like the Maldives, India can enhance its influence and ensure that it remains a key player in regional geopolitics.

Despite these positive developments, challenges remain that could impact bilateral relations between India and the Maldives. The rise of Chinese influence continues to pose strategic concerns for New Delhi. As China expands its presence through infrastructure investments under initiatives like BRI, there is potential for increased competition between India and China for influence over Maldivian resources.

Additionally, domestic political dynamics within the Maldives could complicate relations with India. While Muizzu's government may seek to balance relations with both countries, shifts in public sentiment or political leadership could lead to fluctuations in foreign policy priorities. Maintaining public support for strong relations with India will be essential for ensuring long-term stability.

Conclusion

In summary, the implications of India's evolving relationship with the Maldives are multifaceted, encompassing economic cooperation, security considerations, and regional stability dynamics. As both nations navigate their respective challenges amidst shifting geopolitical landscapes, their partnership will play a crucial role in shaping future developments within South Asia.

India's commitment to supporting Maldivian economic recovery through substantial financial aid and infrastructure investments underscores its strategic importance as a partner. Simultaneously, addressing security concerns related to terrorism and piracy will remain paramount for safeguarding India's maritime interests. Ultimately, fostering strong ties with the Maldives is essential for India's broader objectives within the Indian Ocean region. By navigating these complexities effectively—balancing engagement with China while reinforcing partnerships with neighboring countries—India can enhance its position as a key player committed to promoting stability and prosperity across South Asia.

As both nations continue to explore new avenues for collaboration across various sectors—ranging from trade agreements to infrastructure development—their ability to adapt to changing circumstances will ultimately determine their partnership's trajectory moving forward.

References

- Ahmed, N. (2023). The Indian Ocean Geopolitics: Maldives at the Crossroads. Male: Oceanic Press.
- <https://www.finance.gov.mv/media/news/india-announces-usd-14-billion-assistance-package-to-maldives>
- https://www.mfa.gov.cn/mfa_eng/xw/zyxw/202405/t20240530_11332639.html ● Blyth, M. (2002). Great Transformations: Economic Ideas and Institutional Change in the Twentieth Century. NY: Cambridge University Press.
- India Ministry of External Affairs. (2022). "India-Maldives Bilateral Relations." Retrieved from <https://mea.gov.in>.
- Sundararaman, S. (2021). China's Belt and Road Initiative in the Indian Ocean. New Delhi: Strategic Affairs Publishers.
- Maldives National Bureau of Statistics. (2023). "Economic Indicators Report." Male: Government of Maldives.
- Press Information Bureau (2023). "India's Developmental Assistance to Maldives: An Overview."
- Cheng, J. Y. S. & Wankun, Z. (2002). Patterns and dynamics of China's international strategic behaviour. Journal of Contemporary China, 11(31), 235–260.
- Aryal, Saroj Kumar, and Alexander Droop. "Maldives Walking Tight Rope between India and China." Issue Brief, ISDP, May 13, 2024
- India-Maldives Relations: Its flux through decades - JETIR
- Rasheed, A. A. (2018). Ideas, "Maldives-China relations and balance of power dynamics in South Asia" Journal of South Asian Studies, 6(2).
- Deori Navaneeta (March 2017). "Rethinking India-Maldives Relations in the 21st Century" Journal of Politics & Governance, Pp. 35-43
- Kapoor V Ritika (9 April 2020). "Significance of the Maldives to India, National Maritime Foundation" at <https://maritimeindia.org/significance-of-the-maldives-to-india/> ● Okano-Heijmans, M. (2011). Conceptualizing Economic Diplomacy: The Crossroads of International Relations, Economics, IPE and Diplomatic Studies. The Hague Journal of Diplomacy, 6(1), 7–36.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

writing and research.

Ambika Subramaniam is an undergraduate student at Mount Carmel College, Bengaluru, currently pursuing a triple major in Public Policy, Political Science, and Media Studies. Her academic interests lie at the intersection of governance, strategic communication, and social equity. Drawing from both academic and fieldwork experiences, her research approach is grounded in real-world complexities. Ambika is passionate about using policy as a tool for systemic change and aims to contribute meaningfully to public discourse through